2 INTRODUCTION

This legislative guide is a resource for judicial officers, tribunal members, registry staff, legal practitioners and other court users who are learning about the new regime provided for by the VP Act and/or who might seek to refer to the VP Act at some point in the future.

2.1 Background

2.1.1 Importance of regulating vexatious litigation

The effective management and control of vexatious litigation is fundamental to ensure an efficient and effective justice system and to provide protection to both the courts and the community. Without adequate controls, vexatious litigants can waste a considerable amount of court time, create backlog in the court system (which increases delays for meritorious matters), and force community members to unnecessarily spend time and incur costs in defending frivolous claims.

2.1.2 Parliamentary inquiry into vexatious litigants

In 2008, the Victorian Parliamentary Law Reform Committee (the Committee) conducted an inquiry into vexatious litigants. The Committee examined the effect of vexatious litigants on the justice system and the people who are sued by vexatious litigants. It found that, although small in number, vexatious litigants consume a disproportionate amount of court and tribunal time and resources, which creates delays in the courts and reduces access to justice for other members of the community with meritorious claims. The Committee also found that vexatious litigants can have a significant financial and emotional impact on the people they sue.¹

For example, one vexatious litigant brought 77 separate civil and criminal proceedings over an 11-year period. Many of these proceedings were private prosecutions attempting to summon grand juries to hear treason charges against judicial officers, government ministers and other public officials. Despite the fact that these allegations were completely lacking in substance, considerable court time was required to hear and ultimately dismiss the claims. This not only caused embarrassment, inconvenience and expense to those involved in the proceedings (who were required to spend time and money in contesting the baseless allegations), but it also created delays in the court system for other litigants with genuine claims.

2.1.3 Limitations of the former system

Victoria's former regime for dealing with vexatious litigants was set out in section 21 of the Supreme Court Act 1986.² That section allowed the Supreme Court to declare a person to be a vexatious litigant if they habitually, persistently and without reasonable grounds instituted vexatious proceedings against the same or different persons. A declared vexatious litigant was restrained from commencing new proceedings in Victorian courts and tribunals without first obtaining permission from the court (known as leave).

Section 21 was of limited utility in controlling vexatious behaviour. The Committee identified that:

- 1) the threshold for making an order was high, which made it difficult to have a person declared a vexatious litigant and reduced opportunities for early intervention to manage less serious vexatious behaviour
- 2) there were insufficient barriers in place to prevent a declared vexatious litigant from bringing further vexatious proceedings
- 3) courts and tribunals other than the Supreme Court had limited powers to control vexatious behaviour in their own jurisdictions
- 4) in deciding whether the threshold had been satisfied for the making of an order, the Supreme Court was generally unable to consider important matters, such as relevant proceedings in other Australian jurisdictions, interlocutory applications and appeals from such applications, or the manner in which proceedings had been conducted
- 5) there was a practical difficulty in seeking a vexatious litigant order as such orders could only be sought by the Attorney-General.

The Committee made a number of recommendations to overcome these limitations and to create a more effective framework for managing vexatious behaviour. Some of the Committee's recommendations were based on the approach to managing vexatious litigants in England and Wales, including the tiered system of orders. Other recommendations drew on aspects of a Model Bill approved in 2004 by the then Standing Committee of Attorneys-General (Model Bill).

2.1.4 Other jurisdictions

New South Wales, Queensland, Tasmania, the Northern Territory and the Commonwealth have implemented the Model Bill, under which the superior courts of each jurisdiction can make an order restraining a person from commencing further litigation if satisfied that the person has frequently instituted or conducted vexatious proceedings in Australia.³ Similar legislation also exists in Western Australia.⁴

2.2 Overview of the VP Act

2.2.1 Summary

The VP Act implements a number of the Committee's recommendations and many aspects of the Model Bill. It introduces a comprehensive new regime for the management and prevention of vexatious litigation. Specifically, it provides a range of new powers for the Supreme, County, Magistrates' and Children's Courts and VCAT to manage vexatious behaviour more effectively and at an earlier stage.⁵

The main purpose of the VP Act is to reform and consolidate the law relating to vexatious proceedings in courts and tribunals in a way that balances several competing interests, including:

- ◆ the rights of individuals to access the courts⁶
- ◆ the rights of community members to be protected against repeated vexatious litigation⁷
- ◆ the public interest in an efficient and effective justice system and that promotes uniformity with other jurisdictions in the management and prevention of vexatious behaviour.⁸

The VP Act achieves this balance by giving the courts greater powers to restrict a person's ability to pursue vexatious litigation (which protects both the court system and the community), while at the same time preserving the litigant's access to the courts by allowing them to bring meritorious litigation.

The approach in the VP Act also ensures that court and tribunal resources can be allocated more fairly to the determination of meritorious cases, which will reduce delays and enhance access to justice for members of the community.

The VP Act aligns the existing regimes in relation to vexatious litigants under the Family Violence Protection Act 2008 and the Personal Safety Intervention Orders Act 2010 (the intervention order legislation) with the new regime. The VP Act makes specific provision for the Magistrates' Court and Children's Court to make orders in relation to vexatious litigation conducted under those Acts, which will ensure that a single framework for managing vexatious litigation operates across Victoria.⁹

2.2.2 Commencement

The commencement date for the VP Act is 31 October 2014.¹⁰

2.2.3 Application

The VP Act applies to all civil proceedings and all criminal proceedings in a Victorian court or tribunal.¹¹

2.2.4 Orders that can be made

Under the VP Act, the Courts and VCAT can make:

- 1) three types of 'litigation restraint order' (LRO):
 - a. a limited litigation restraint order (LLRO) under Part 2

³ Vexatious Proceedings Act 2005 (Qld), Vexatious Proceedings Act (NT), Vexatious Proceedings Act 2008 (NSW) and Vexatious Proceedings Act 2011 (Tas). The Access to Justice (Federal Jurisdiction) Amendment Act 2012 (Cth) implemented the Model Law federally by amending the Family Law Act 1975 (Cth), the Federal Court of Australia Act 1976 (Cth), the Federal Magistrates Act 1999 (Cth) and the Judiciary Act 1903 (Cth).

⁴ Vexatious Proceedings Restriction Act 2002 (WA).

- b. an extended litigation restraint order (ELRO) under Part 3
 - c. a general litigation restraint order (GLRO) under Part 4¹²
- 2) an acting in concert order under Part 5
 - 3) an appeal restriction order under Part 6
 - 4) an order granting leave to proceed under Part 8
 - 5) an order varying or revoking an LRO under Part 9.

Each of these orders is discussed in detail later in this guide.

VOCAT may also make certain orders under the VP Act.

Appendix 1 sets out a series of flowcharts explaining the processes involved in applying for orders under the VP Act.

Appendix 2 sets out the orders that each Victorian court or tribunal may make under the VP Act.

2.2.5 Effect on existing powers of courts and VCAT

The VP Act does not take away any existing powers of the courts or tribunals to control their own proceedings.¹³ For example, the courts may still bring contempt of court proceedings if appropriate, or summarily dismiss a proceeding that is vexatious or that has no real prospect of success.

However, to the extent that there is any inconsistency with the courts' current powers (other than the courts' inherent or implied powers) and the VP Act, the provisions of the Act will prevail to the extent of that inconsistency.¹⁴

¹² A GLRO can only be made by the Supreme Court of Victoria. See further, heading 5.

¹³ Sections 6(2) and 8.

¹⁴ Section 7.

3 LIMITED LITIGATION RESTRAINT ORDERS

Part 2 of the VP Act provides for the making of LLROs.

Appendix 1 contains a flowchart that sets out the procedure for applying for an LLRO.

3.1 What is the effect of an LLRO?

An LLRO may prevent a person from continuing or making further interlocutory applications or specified types of interlocutory applications in a particular proceeding without first obtaining leave of the court or VCAT to do so.¹⁵ The order lasts for the duration of the proceeding.¹⁶

The making of an LLRO does not affect the person's right to make applications in other proceedings or to continue or commence other proceedings.¹⁷

When an LLRO is made, any existing applications that would contravene the terms of the order are deemed to be stayed, and any new applications made in contravention of the order are deemed to be of no effect.¹⁸ This means that if there is an oversight and the application is allowed to be commenced in the court or VCAT, other parties are not required to take any steps to have the contravening application dismissed.

3.2 Who can apply for an LLRO?

The court or VCAT may make the LLRO in respect of a person who is a party to a proceeding in that court or VCAT (as the case requires) on its own motion or on the application of:

- 1) the Attorney-General¹⁹
- 2) if the person has made a vexatious application against another person, that other person, or
- 3) a person who has a sufficient interest in the matter.²⁰

Other than the Attorney-General, a person applying for an LLRO must seek leave of the court or VCAT in which the proceeding is being heard.²¹ The court or VCAT must not grant leave unless satisfied that there is merit in the application and that the granting of the application would not be an abuse of process.²²

3.3 When can an LLRO be made?

An LLRO can be made where a person has made two or more vexatious interlocutory applications in the relevant proceeding.²³ In making the order, the court or VCAT may take into account any matter it considers relevant including:

- 1) any interlocutory application made by the person, or an entity controlled by the person, in any Australian court or tribunal
- 2) the existence of any order made by an Australian court or tribunal against the person or an entity controlled by the person
- 3) any other matter relating to the way in which the person conducts or has conducted litigation.²⁴

The courts and VCAT must not make an LLRO without hearing the person who will be subject to the order, or giving them an opportunity to be heard.²⁵ The court or VCAT may order that submissions be made in writing or given at an oral hearing.²⁶

¹⁹ For the purposes of deciding whether to make an application for an LLRO against a person, the Attorney-General may request a Victorian court or tribunal to provide a copy of documents held by that court or tribunal in relation to an interlocutory application made or a proceeding commenced by the person. The court or tribunal is authorised by the VP Act to provide the Attorney-General with a copy of the requested documents: section 43.

4 EXTENDED LITIGATION RESTRAINT ORDERS

Part 3 of the VP Act provides for the making of ELROs.

There are two different types of ELROs that can be made under the VP Act, one of which is general in nature and one of which relates specifically to proceedings under the intervention order legislation. Only the Magistrates' Court and the Children's Court can make ELROs that relate to intervention order legislation.

Appendix 1 contains a flowchart that sets out the procedure for applying for an ELRO.

4.1 ELROs (general)

4.1.1 What is the effect of an ELRO (general)?

The first type of ELRO has the following features:

- 1) The order may prevent a person from continuing or commencing any legal proceedings against a specified person or other entity, or in relation to a specified matter, without first obtaining leave to do so.²⁷
- 2) Orders made by jurisdictions other than the Supreme Court only restrain proceedings in the jurisdiction that made the order.²⁸ For example, an order made by the County Court only restrains litigation in the County Court and does not affect the person's right to commence proceedings in other jurisdictions. However, orders made by the Supreme Court have a general application and restrain litigation in all Victorian courts and tribunals.²⁹
- 3) The order can be made where a person has frequently commenced or conducted vexatious proceedings against the specified person or other entity or in relation to the specified matter.³⁰
- 4) The order lasts for the period of time specified in the order, which can be indefinitely. The duration can also be extended.³¹
- 5) When an ELRO is made, any existing applications or proceedings that would contravene the terms of the order are deemed to be stayed, and any new applications made or proceedings commenced in contravention of the order are deemed to be of no effect.³² This means that if there is an oversight and the proceeding is allowed to be commenced in the court or VCAT, other parties are not required to take any steps to have the contravening proceeding dismissed.

4.1.2 Who can apply for an ELRO (general)?

The court or VCAT may make an ELRO in respect of a person on its own motion or on the application of:

- 1) the Attorney-General³³
- 2) if the person has commenced or conducted a vexatious proceeding against another person, that other person, or
- 3) a person who has a sufficient interest in the matter.³⁴

Other than the Attorney-General, a person applying for an ELRO must seek leave of the court or VCAT in which the order is sought.³⁵ The court or VCAT must not grant leave unless satisfied that there is merit in the application and that the granting of the application would not be an abuse of process.³⁶

4.1.3 When can an ELRO (general) be made?

An ELRO can be made where a person has frequently commenced or conducted vexatious proceedings against another person or other entity or in relation to a matter.³⁷ In making the order, the court or VCAT may take into account any matter it considers relevant including:

²⁷ Sections 20, 21, 22(1), and 24.

²⁸ Sections 21, 22(1), and 24.

²⁹ Section 20.

³⁰ Section 17(1).

³¹ Section 27.

³² Section 25.

³³ For the purposes of deciding whether to make an application for an ELRO against a person, the Attorney-General may request a Victorian court or tribunal to provide a copy of documents held by that court or tribunal in relation to an interlocutory application made or a proceeding commenced by the person. The court or tribunal is authorised by the VP Act to provide the Attorney-General with a copy of the requested documents: section 43.

³⁴ Sections 16(1) and 17(4).

³⁵ Section 16(2).

³⁶ Section 16(3).

- 1) a proceeding commenced or conducted by the person, or an entity controlled by the person, in any Australian court or tribunal
- 2) the existence of any order made by an Australian court or tribunal against the person or an entity controlled by the person
- 3) any other matter relating to the way in which the person conducts or has conducted litigation.³⁸

The courts and VCAT must not make an ELRO without hearing the person who will be subject to the order, or giving them an opportunity to be heard.³⁹ The court or VCAT may order that submissions be made in writing or given at an oral hearing.⁴⁰

4.2 ELROs (intervention order legislation)

4.2.1 What is the effect of an ELRO (intervention order legislation)?

The second type of ELRO, which relates to intervention order legislation, has the following features:

- 1) The order may prevent a person from continuing or commencing legal proceedings in the Magistrates' Court or the Children's Court under the intervention order legislation against a specified person or his or her child, or in relation to a specified matter, without leave.⁴¹
- 2) The order does not affect the person's right to commence proceedings under legislation other than the intervention order legislation or to commence proceedings in other jurisdictions.⁴²
- 3) The order can be made where a person has frequently commenced or conducted vexatious proceedings under the intervention order legislation against the specified person or in relation to the specified matter.⁴³ Proceedings conducted under legislation other than the intervention order legislation are not relevant to this order.
- 4) The order lasts for the period of time specified in the order, which can be indefinitely. The duration can also be extended.⁴⁴
- 5) When an ELRO is made, any existing applications or proceedings that would contravene the terms of the order are deemed to be stayed, and any new applications made or proceedings commenced in contravention of the order are deemed to be of no effect.⁴⁵ This means that if there is an oversight and the proceeding is allowed to be commenced, other parties are not required to take any steps to have the contravening proceeding dismissed.

4.2.2 Who can apply for an ELRO (intervention order legislation)?

The Magistrates' Court or Children's Court may make an ELRO that relates to intervention order legislation in respect of a person on its own motion or on the application of:

- 1) the Attorney-General⁴⁶
- 2) if the person has commenced or conducted a vexatious proceeding under intervention order legislation against another person, that other person, or
- 3) a person who has a sufficient interest in the matter.⁴⁷

Other than the Attorney-General, a person applying for an intervention order ELRO must seek leave of the Magistrates' Court or the Children's Court.⁴⁸ The court must not grant leave unless satisfied that there is merit in the application and that the granting of the application would not be an abuse of process.⁴⁹

³⁷ Section 17(1).

³⁸ Section 17(2).

³⁹ Section 45(1).

⁴⁰ Section 45(3).

⁴¹ Sections 22(2) and 23(1).

⁴² Section 26(4)(b) and (c).

⁴³ Section 19.

⁴⁴ Section 27.

⁴⁵ Section 25. Note that this provision is expressed to be subject to the terms of the ELRO.

⁴⁶ For the purposes of deciding whether to make an application for an ELRO against a person, the Attorney-General may request a Victorian court or tribunal to provide a copy of documents held by that court or tribunal in relation to an interlocutory application made or a proceeding commenced by the person. The court or tribunal is authorised by the VP Act to provide the Attorney-General with a copy of the requested documents: section 43.

⁴⁷ Section 18(1).

⁴⁸ Section 18(2).

⁴⁹ Section 18(3).

The Magistrates' Court or Children's Court must send a copy of an application for an ELRO that relates to intervention order legislation to the person who it is proposed will be protected by the order and the person who it is proposed will be subject to the order.⁵⁰

4.2.3 When can an ELRO (intervention order legislation) be made?

The Magistrates' Court or the Children's Court can make an intervention order ELRO where a person has frequently commenced or conducted vexatious proceedings under intervention order legislation against another person or other entity or in relation to a matter.⁵¹ In making the order, the Magistrates' Court or Children's Court may take into account any matter it considers relevant.⁵² The order must include a statement of reasons.⁵³

The Magistrates' Court or the Children's Court must not make an ELRO that relates to intervention order legislation without hearing the person who will be subject to the order and the person who will be protected by the order, or giving those persons an opportunity to be heard.⁵⁴ The court may order that submissions be made in writing or given at an oral hearing.⁵⁵

4.2.4 Finding out about the making of an ELRO (intervention order legislation)

Where the Magistrates' Court or Children's Court has made an ELRO that relates to intervention order legislation, that court must give a copy of the order to:

- 1) the person subject to the order
- 2) the person protected by the order
- 3) if the applicant is not the person protected by the order, the applicant.⁵⁶

5 GENERAL LITIGATION RESTRAINT ORDERS

Part 4 of the VP Act provides for the making of GLROs.

Appendix 1 contains a flowchart that sets out the procedure for applying for a GLRO.

5.1 What is the effect of a GLRO?

A GLRO may prevent a person from continuing or commencing any legal proceedings in a Victorian court or tribunal without first obtaining leave to do so.⁵⁷

The order lasts for the period of time specified in the order, which can be indefinitely. The duration can also be extended.⁵⁸

When a GLRO is made, any existing applications or proceedings that would contravene the terms of the order are deemed to be stayed, and any new applications made or proceedings commenced in contravention of the order are deemed to be of no effect.⁵⁹ This means that if there is an oversight and a prohibited proceeding is allowed to be commenced in the court or VCAT, other parties are not required to take any steps to have the contravening proceeding dismissed.

5.2 Who can apply for a GLRO?

Only the Attorney-General can apply for a GLRO, although the Supreme Court may also make such an order on its own motion.⁶⁰

For the purposes of deciding whether to make an application for a GLRO against a person, the Attorney-General may request a Victorian court or tribunal to provide a copy of documents held by that court or tribunal in relation to an interlocutory application made or a proceeding commenced by the person. The court or tribunal is authorised by the VP Act to provide the Attorney-General with a copy of the requested documents.⁶¹

5.3 When can a GLRO be made?

A GLRO can be made only by the Supreme Court constituted by a judge of that court, and only where a person has persistently and without reasonable grounds commenced or conducted vexatious proceedings.⁶²

In making the order, the Supreme Court may take into account any matter it considers relevant including:

- 1) a proceeding commenced or conducted by the person, or an entity controlled by the person, in any Australian court or tribunal
- 2) the existence of any order made by an Australian court or tribunal against the person or an entity controlled by the person
- 3) any other matter relating to the way in which the person conducts or has conducted litigation.⁶³

The Supreme Court must not make a GLRO without hearing the person who will be subject to the order, or giving them an opportunity to be heard.⁶⁴ The Supreme Court may order that submissions be made in writing or given at an oral hearing.⁶⁵

6 ACTING IN CONCERT ORDERS

Part 5 of the VP Act provides for the making of acting in concert orders.

There are two types of acting in concert orders: one that can be made by the courts and VCAT generally, and one that can be made by the Magistrates' Court or Children's Court against a person who is acting in concert with a person who is subject to an ELRO that relates to intervention order legislation.

6.1 Acting in concert orders (general)

6.1.1 What is the effect of an acting in concert order (general)?

The courts and VCAT can make a range of orders against a person acting in concert with a person who is subject to an order made under the VP Act. This includes an order that the person is subject to an LLRO or an ELRO on the same terms as the person who is already subject to an LRO or on any other terms considered appropriate. The courts and VCAT may also strike out an interlocutory application made by the person, stay a proceeding commenced by the person or order the person to pay the costs of the relevant application or proceeding.⁶⁶

6.1.2 Who can apply for an acting in concert order (general)?

A court or VCAT may make an order in respect of a person who is acting in concert with a person who is subject to an LRO on its own motion or on the application of:

- 1) a person who applied for the LRO to which that other person is subject, or
- 2) a person named in an interlocutory application or a proceeding that, if made or commenced by the person who is subject to the LRO, would contravene the terms of that LRO.⁶⁷

6.1.3 When can an acting in concert order (general) be made?

A court or VCAT may make an order in respect of a person who is acting in concert with a person who is subject to an LRO if it is satisfied that:

- 1) the first mentioned person has made an interlocutory application or commenced a proceeding, and
- 2) the interlocutory application or proceeding, if made or commenced by the person who is subject to the LRO, would contravene the terms of that LRO.⁶⁸

The court or VCAT must not make an acting in concert order without hearing the person who will be subject to the order, or giving them an opportunity to be heard.⁶⁹ The court or VCAT may order that submissions be made in writing or given at an oral hearing.⁷⁰

6.2 Acting in concert orders (intervention order legislation)

6.2.1 What is the effect of an acting in concert order (intervention order legislation)?

The Magistrates' Court and Children's Court can make a range of orders against a person acting in concert with a second person who is subject to an ELRO that relates to intervention order legislation, including making an order that the first person is subject to an ELRO on the same terms as the second person.⁷¹

6.2.2 Who can apply for an acting in concert order (intervention order legislation)?

The Magistrates' Court and Children's Court may make an order in respect of a person who is acting in concert with a person who is subject to an ELRO that relates to intervention order legislation on its own motion or on the application of:

- 1) a person who applied for the ELRO to which that other person is subject, or ⁷¹ Section 36(3).

- 2) a person named in an interlocutory application or a proceeding that, if made or commenced by the person who is subject to the ELRO, would contravene the terms of that ELRO.⁷²

6.2.3 When can an acting in concert order (intervention order legislation) be made?

The Magistrates' Court and Children's Court may make an order in respect of a person who is acting in concert with a person who is subject to an ELRO that relates to intervention order legislation if it is satisfied that:

- 1) the first mentioned person has commenced a proceeding under intervention order legislation, and
- 2) the proceeding, if commenced by the person who is subject to the ELRO, would contravene the terms of that ELRO.⁷³

The Magistrates' Court or the Children's Court must not make an acting in concert order that relates to intervention order legislation without hearing the person who will be subject to the order and the person who will be protected by the order, or giving those persons an opportunity to be heard.⁷⁴ The court may order that submissions be made in writing or given at an oral hearing.⁷⁵

6.2.4 Finding out about the making of an acting in concert order (intervention order legislation)

Where the Magistrates' Court or Children's Court has made an acting in concert order that relates to intervention order legislation, that court must give a copy of the order to:

- 1) the person subject to the order
- 2) the person protected by the order
- 3) if the applicant is not the person protected by the order, the applicant.⁷⁶

7 APPEAL RESTRICTION ORDERS

Part 6 of the VP Act provides for the making of appeal restriction orders.

There are two types of appeal restriction orders: one that can be made by the courts and VCAT generally, and one that can be made by the Magistrates' Court or Children's Court against a person who is subject to an ELRO that relates to intervention order legislation.

In both scenarios, an appeal restriction order made by a court or VCAT does not affect a person's right to make or continue another type of interlocutory application in a Victorian court or tribunal, or to commence or continue a proceeding in a Victorian court or tribunal (other than the appeal).⁷⁷

The order lasts for the duration specified in the order, which may be indefinitely. The duration can also be extended.⁷⁸

When an appeal restriction order is made, any existing applications for leave to appeal that would contravene the terms of the order are deemed to be stayed, and any new applications for leave to appeal made in contravention of the order are deemed to be of no effect.⁷⁹ This means that if there is an oversight and a prohibited application for leave to appeal is allowed to be commenced, other parties are not required to take any steps to have the contravening application dismissed.

7.1 Appeal restriction orders (general)

7.1.1 What is the effect of an appeal restriction order (general)?

Supreme Court

An appeal restriction order made by the Supreme Court may prevent a person subject to an LRO from appealing a decision by a Victorian court or tribunal to refuse the person leave to make or continue an interlocutory application or to commence or continue a proceeding.⁸⁰

Other courts and VCAT

An appeal restriction order made by the County Court, Magistrates' Court or VCAT may prevent a person subject to an LRO from appealing a decision by the relevant court or by VCAT to refuse leave to:

- 1) make or continue an interlocutory application in a proceeding in the relevant court or in VCAT (as the case requires), or
- 2) commence or continue a proceeding in the relevant court or in VCAT (as the case requires).⁸¹

7.1.2 When can an appeal restriction order (general) be made?

The order can be made where a person has frequently made vexatious applications seeking leave to bring new proceedings. The court or VCAT must also be satisfied that it is in the interests of justice to make the order.⁸²

The court or VCAT must not make an appeal restriction order without hearing the person who will be subject to the order, or giving them an opportunity to be heard.⁸³ The court or VCAT may order that submissions be made in writing or given at an oral hearing.⁸⁴

7.2 Appeal restriction orders (intervention order legislation)

7.2.1 What is the effect of an appeal restriction order (intervention order legislation)?

The Magistrates' Court or the Children's Court may make an appeal restriction order in respect of a person who is subject to an ELRO that relates to intervention order legislation. Such an order may prevent a person subject to the ELRO from appealing a decision of the relevant court to refuse the person leave to make or continue a proceeding in that court.⁸⁵

7.2.2 When can an appeal restriction order (intervention order legislation) be made?

The order can be made where a person has frequently made vexatious applications seeking leave to proceed. The relevant court must also be satisfied that it is in the interests of justice to make the order.⁸⁶

The Magistrates' Court or the Children's Court must not make an appeal restriction order that relates to intervention order legislation without hearing the person who will be subject to the order and the person who will be protected by the order, or giving those persons an opportunity to be heard.⁸⁷ The court may order that submissions be made in writing or given at an oral hearing.⁸⁸

7.2.3 Finding out about the making of an appeal restriction order (intervention order legislation)

Where the Magistrates' Court or Children's Court has made an appeal restriction order that relates to intervention order legislation, that court must give a copy of the order to:

- 1) the person subject to the order
- 2) the person protected by the order
- 3) if the applicant is not the person protected by the order, the applicant.⁸⁹

8 ORDER GRANTING LEAVE TO PROCEED

A person subject to an LRO must apply for leave to proceed in order to make or continue an interlocutory application that is prohibited by the LRO or to continue or commence a proceeding that is prohibited by the LRO. Part 8 of the VP Act provides for the making of orders granting such leave.

Appendix 1 contains flowcharts that set out the procedure for applying for leave to proceed.

8.1 Procedural matters

8.1.1 In which forum should the application for leave be filed?

The leave application must generally be made to the court or VCAT that made the order.⁹⁰ However, in the case of an ELRO or GLRO made by the Supreme Court, the leave application must be made to the court or tribunal in which the proposed proceeding would be heard, unless the order otherwise requires the Supreme Court to hear and determine the leave application.⁹¹ It will be up to the Supreme Court, when making the relevant order, to specify which court or tribunal is to hear the leave application.

8.1.2 What is a person required to disclose in his or her application?

An application for leave to proceed must disclose the following:

- 1) all previous leave applications made by the person
- 2) details of previous vexatious applications, vexatious proceedings and applications or proceedings which have been stayed or dismissed on the basis of being made, commenced or conducted without merit
- 3) an explanation as to how the leave application is materially different to previous applications
- 4) all material facts known to the applicant, whether adverse to or supportive of the application.⁹²

8.1.3 Can the registry refuse to accept the application?

The principal registrar (or equivalent) of the relevant court or tribunal can refuse to accept a leave application for filing, without the direction of the court or tribunal, if he or she is not satisfied that the application is materially different to a previous unsuccessful application.⁹³

8.1.4 Is the proposed respondent notified about the leave application?

The proposed respondent is only notified about the leave application if the court or tribunal considers that the application should proceed. The applicant for leave is prevented from notifying relevant persons about the leave application unless and until the court or tribunal directs him or her to notify those persons or otherwise makes an order in relation to notification.⁹⁴

If the proposed respondent is notified, he or she will be given an opportunity to be heard in relation to the leave application.⁹⁵ The court or VCAT may order either written submissions or oral submissions at its discretion.⁹⁶ Other relevant persons are also notified and given an opportunity to be heard, including the Attorney-General and the person who applied for the LRO to which the application for leave relates.⁹⁷

This approach ensures that those named in a proposed application or proceeding are not put to the time and expense of contesting a leave application that the court or tribunal considers, on the basis of the leave application and the material disclosed, should not proceed.⁹⁸

8.1.5 Does the leave application need to be heard orally?

There is a presumption in the VP Act that leave applications will be determined on the papers. However, the court or tribunal may conduct an oral hearing if there are exceptional circumstances and it is appropriate to do so in the interests of justice.⁹⁹

⁹⁹ Section 63.

8.2 Substantive matters

8.2.1 What is the threshold for granting leave?

Under the former section 21 of the Supreme Court Act 1986, leave could only be granted if the proposed proceeding were not an abuse of process. This was a relatively low threshold and was readily satisfied.¹⁰⁰

By contrast, the VP Act requires an applicant for leave to establish that the proposed proceeding will not be vexatious and that there are reasonable grounds for bringing the proceeding.¹⁰¹ This will require the applicant to establish that the proposed proceeding has a proper basis, for example with evidence as to the factual foundations of the proceeding. If these matters are not established, the leave application will be dismissed.

The court or tribunal may also impose conditions on the grant of leave, for example by requiring that the applicant give security for costs.

8.2.2 What powers do the courts and tribunals have to dismiss leave applications?

In addition to dismissing an application for leave if not satisfied that the proposed proceeding will not be vexatious and that there are reasonable grounds for the proceeding, the relevant court or tribunal may dismiss the leave application if not satisfied that the application is materially different to a previous unsuccessful leave application made by the person.¹⁰²

9 VARIATION AND REVOCATION ORDERS

Part 9 of the VP Act provides for the making of variation and revocation orders.

Appendix 1 contains a flowchart that sets out the procedure for applying for variation or revocation of an LRO.

9.1 When can a litigation restraint order be varied or revoked?

The court or VCAT that made an LRO may vary that order in any manner considered appropriate, or may revoke the order, if it considers it is in the interests of justice to do so.¹⁰³ The person subject to the LRO can apply for the variation or revocation of the order, but only with leave of the relevant court or VCAT.¹⁰⁴ The court or VCAT may also vary or revoke the order on its own motion.¹⁰⁵

9.2 Is the person who applied for the LRO notified about the application?

The person who applied for the LRO is notified only if the court or tribunal considers that the application for variation or revocation should proceed. As with the process for applications for leave to proceed, the applicant is prevented from notifying relevant persons about the application unless and until the court or tribunal directs them to notify those persons or otherwise makes an order in relation to notification.¹⁰⁶

Where a person has been given notice that the court or VCAT proposes to determine the application of another person (who is the subject of an LRO) for revocation or variation of an LRO, the court or VCAT may receive written or oral submissions from the first person in relation to that application.¹⁰⁷

9.3 Does there need to be an oral hearing for the application?

As with applications for leave to proceed, there is a presumption that applications for variation or revocation will be determined on the papers. However, the court or VCAT may conduct an oral hearing if there are exceptional circumstances and it is appropriate to do so in the interests of justice.¹⁰⁸

9.4 What does a variation or revocation application prevention order do and when can it be made?

A variation or revocation application prevention order may prevent a person from continuing an application for leave to vary or revoke an LRO or from making further applications for leave to vary or revoke an LRO.¹⁰⁹

The order may be made if the person has frequently made vexatious applications for leave to vary or revoke an LRO.¹¹⁰

The order lasts for the period of time specified in the order, which may be indefinitely. The duration may also be extended.¹¹¹

10 APPEALS

Part 10 of the VP Act provides for appeals, which can only be commenced once the Supreme Court has granted leave to appeal.

Appendix 1 contains a flowchart that sets out the procedure for appeals.

10.1 Which decisions can be appealed under the VP Act?

A person may apply to the Supreme Court for leave to appeal the following decisions:

- 1) a decision to refuse leave to apply for an LRO
- 2) a decision to make, or refuse to make, an LRO or an acting in concert order
- 3) a decision to vary or revoke, or refuse to vary or revoke, an LRO
- 4) a decision to refuse an application for leave to proceed (unless an appeal restriction order is in place, in which case an appeal is not available from such decisions).

An appeal is only available on a question of law.¹¹²

10.2 Is the proposed respondent notified about the leave application?

The proposed respondent is notified only if the Supreme Court considers that the application for leave to appeal should proceed. As with applications for leave to proceed and applications to vary or revoke an LRO, the applicant is prevented from notifying relevant persons about the leave application unless and until the court or tribunal directs him or her to notify those persons or otherwise makes an order in relation to notification.¹¹³

Where a person has been given notice that the Supreme Court proposes to determine the application of another person (who is the subject of an LRO) for leave to appeal, the Court may consider written or oral submissions from the first person in relation to that application.¹¹⁴

10.3 Does there need to be an oral hearing for the leave application?

As with applications for leave to proceed and applications to vary or revoke a litigation restraint order, there is a presumption that applications for leave to appeal will be determined on the papers.¹¹⁵

11 OTHER MATTERS

11.1 Publication of orders

The courts and VCAT are required to notify the Attorney-General about certain orders made under the VP Act¹¹⁶, and the Attorney-General is required to publish a copy of those orders in the Government Gazette.¹¹⁷ The Attorney-General may also choose to publish details of the orders made in another way.¹¹⁸

A copy of an order that relates to intervention order legislation must have removed from it the name of any person protected by the order, including a child of that person, unless the court when making the order otherwise directs.¹¹⁹

11.2 Effect on litigants previously declared vexatious

11.2.1 Supreme Court Act 1986

The VP Act deems declared vexatious litigants to be subject to a GLRO on the same terms as the terms of the order under section 21 of the Supreme Court Act. The provisions of the VP Act apply to the person, including the additional requirements when making applications for leave to bring further proceedings.¹²⁰ For example, if a declared vexatious litigant wants to bring new proceedings, he or she will be required to disclose various matters and establish that the proposed proceeding is not vexatious and that there are reasonable grounds for the proceeding.

11.2.2 Intervention order legislation

Similarly, the VP Act provides that historical orders declaring a person to be vexatious under section 193 of the Family Violence Protection Act 2008 or section 165 of the Personal Safety Intervention Orders Act 2010 are taken to be:

- 1) in the case of orders made by the Magistrates' Court, ELROs that relate to intervention order legislation made by the Magistrates' Court under section 19 of the VP Act, or
- 2) in the case of an orders made by the Children's Court, ERLOs that relate to intervention order legislation made by the Children's Court under section 19 of the VP Act.¹²¹

The terms of such ELROs are the same as the terms of the orders made under the intervention order legislation unless those terms are otherwise varied or revoked under the VP Act.¹²²
